Demand for primary total knee arthroplasty (TKA) continues to rise, with some estimates predicting this to be as high as 400% than it currently is, and this will inevitably lead to increased demand for revision surgery. Furthermore, this is a sub-specialist area of arthroplasty that is complex and challenging with high failure rates, meaning that there is a real need to improve the outcomes of these procedures. Within this book, the chapters focus on a particular subject area focusing on how to successfully perform a procedure in a step-by-step manner in a variety of scenarios from condylar revisions to salvage cases. Topics covered include how to use surgical techniques in instances of periprosthetic distal femur fractures and manage infections where bone loss has been significant. Long-term outcome data is also presented to enable the reader to develop a deep understanding of where a particular strategy might be most effective. Two procedures were used to administer the task. In one procedure the number of decks of cards that had to be maintained to provide various orders within subjects and over subjects and problems made the administration of the task awkward, time consuming, and fraught with possible sources of error. In the other procedure, a revision of the first, the task elements of the problems assigned to each subject were stamped in random locations on a 5 in. x 8 in. card, thus greatly simplifying the administration of the task. Intertrial time intervals were reduced from about 120 to about 20 seconds. Comparisons of data obtained from two experiments, one using the original procedure and the other the revised procedure, showed no significant procedural effects; both procedures produced the same results with respect to the effects of task difficulty and communication structure on group effectiveness.
